Contents

Acknowledgements vi
Introduction vii

1 Key aspects of counselling 1
Introduction 1
Some definitions 3
Therapeutic counselling and counselling skills 5
Counselling skills and counselling theory 6
Problems of advice 10
Issues which bring people to counselling 11
Skills training 24
Summary 27
References/Further reading/Resources 28

2 Skills and approaches 32
Introduction 32
The structure of counselling 32
Theoretical approaches in counselling 35
Counselling skills 38
Summary 59
References/Further reading/Resources 59

3 Psychodynamic counselling 62
Introduction 62
Psychodynamic counselling: key concepts 63
The psychosexual stages of development 66
Skills used in psychodynamic counselling 79
Summary 87
References/Further reading/Resources 89

4 Post-Freudian psychodynamic counselling 91
Introduction 91
Evolution of theory 91
Alfred Adler (1870–1937) 91
Carl Jung (1875–1961) 96
Ego psychology and object relations theory 103
Ego psychology 103
Object relations theory 107
Other views 113
Summary 117
References/Further reading/Resources 118

5 Phenomenological and humanistic approaches 122
Introduction 122
The meaning of phenomenology in relation to counselling 123
Rogers and the person-centred approach 124
Maslow and humanism 133

The existential approach 140
Transpersonal psychology 146
Summary 148
References/Further reading/Resources 151

6 Gestalt therapy and psychodrama 153
Introduction 153
Gestalt therapy: Fritz Perls (1893–1970) 153
Psychodrama and the work of J. L. Moreno 170
Summary 176
References/Further reading/Resources 177

7 Transactional analysis 181
Introduction 181
Eric Berne (1910–1970) 181
Ego states 183
Scripts 196
Summary 205
References/Further reading/Resources 205

8 Behavioural and cognitive behavioural approaches 209
Introduction 209
Evolution of behaviour therapy 209
Application to practice 213
Behaviour therapy and its view of the person 215
The cognitive emphasis 226
Rational emotive behaviour therapy 227
Cognitive behaviour therapy today 241
CBT and the internet 243
Summary 244
References/Further reading/Resources 247

9 The group context 251
Introduction 251
How groups evolved 251
Developments in Britain 253
Psychotherapy and counselling groups 258
Setting up a group 268
Stages of group life 271
What people contribute to groups 274
Theoretical approaches to groupwork 276
Summary 280
References/Further reading/Resources 282

10 Ethical considerations 285
Introduction 285
Confidentiality 285
The counselling relationship 291
Transference and the counselling relationship 293
Ending counselling 297
Other indications 299

Referral 299
Clients in crisis 302
Supervision 306
Education and training/research 309
Summary 312
References/Further reading/Resources 312

Glossary 317
Index 344