Kensler's Father-in-Law Killer

---

When I told my friend Chris Kensler I was writing a book on cocktails, he responded with such an enthusiastic and particular recitation of a recipe for a martini, I had to include it. The most important thing about this drink is that the entire thing be prepared in your freezer. So if you plan on making Kensler's Father-in-Law Killer, clear a spot between the frozen peas and ice cream.

3 oz. gin
½ oz. dry vermouth
1 thinly sliced apple piece

Chill your favorite gin overnight or for at least 2 hours. Rinse a martini glass under cold water. Do not dry it—leave wet and place in the freezer. Pour vermouth into the glass, and leave in the freezer for 10 minutes. Remove the glass from the freezer, swirl vermouth so it coats the glass, and then dump out vermouth. Put the glass back on the freezer shelf, pour in gin, and garnish with apple slice. Remove from freezer and drink.

Cocktail Conversation

The only cocktail debate more rousing than the origins of the martini is the proper way to make one. Everyone thinks his way is the best way. With this in mind, I give you the following caveat: this martini recipe is the way I like to drink mine. It's not right or wrong—it's simply my preference. I like it dry, and I think they should be stirred, not shaken. I am Italian, so maybe that's why I'm partial to olives. Occasionally I get in the mood for a vodka martini and forego gin entirely (gasp!). If you prefer yours less dry, add more vermouth. If you think even a drop of vermouth is too much, that's fine, too. But whatever you do, drink that baby cold.
